

Proclamation of Neutrality

Example written by students like you!

We, as the co-Presidents of the United States decline declaring war against either Britain or France. For it would be a horrendous proclamation that could result in extremely unfavorable endings that would be unpleasant for the US and several other countries. As for the country we choose to side with, we have already stated that we prefer to remain neutral.

We decided that our belief in the ability to petition and assemble prohibits us, the United States, from being involved with the British. However, seeing as we have very close ties with Britain, we cannot coincide with the French. We hope that the combatants in this war will respect our decision and realize that we took quite a while, weighing the good and bad sides of this particular coin to find the present result.

Therefore, both Miranda Heather Sparks and Emmaline Louise Fisher, co-presidents of the united states decline any invitations to war and have signed (figuratively) this document so that no one can twist our words. We are currently very against fighting and refuse to enter in any unjust relations with either the French or British.
