What pattern can you see in the landscape in Utah that is from the early Mormon Colonizing days? Explain:

Ch. 7.2 Mormon / Latter-Day Saint Towns

Gathering to Zion

Meanwhile, the missionary work of the LDS church continued. Missionaries were sent all over North America, as well as Europe, preaching to people to join them in Zion (Utah).

This gathering had other, less religious benefits to the Church and converts as well. This new land needed experts of all kinds to make it a success, and trained weavers, architects, printers, stonemasons, etc, would all be put to good use.

Even shipbuilders found use out in Utah! There are several LDS chapels for example that were built using shipbuilding designs, which were then flipped upside down. Examples: Pine Valley Chapel, near Saint George; Spring City Chapel, in Central Utah;

Emigrants by the 1000s!

During the 1840s-50s, millions of immigrants were leaving Europe and coming to the U.S. to find jobs, land and freedom from oppression.

(emigrants leave, immigrants come)*

Many of these were Mormons, most being from Canada, the British Isles, and Scandinavia. It was a dangerous journey, because they had to come first by boat across the Atlantic, then by river, and finally by wagon.

Each year, more and more Mormons arrived. The next year, another 3000 joined the saints in SLC, and by 1857, 35,000 immigrants had arrived, and many were sent out to settle other areas.

Arriving, and Settling

The Perpetual Emigration Fund (PEF) was established to help pay for the settlers that were trying to come to Utah. Moving that far was no easy (or cheap) task. VID

The church sent PEF agents to areas with lots of Mormon converts, like England for example, who could issue loans to the converts, and they would be helped by other PEF agents in America when they arrived in the states, to furnish provisions like wagons, etc., for the journey West.

Meanwhile, when many of these converts arrived in the Salt Lake Valley, they were soon “called” to go and settle other areas in church meetings, depending on their expertise, etc. You didn’t have to go of course, but if the Lord’s prophet asked, well, you usually did.

Settling Utah, and Beyond!

Many people were called, but others also joined them who were not, such as friends, family, etc. Many settled with others from where they had come from, with many Welsh settlers moving to Lehi, UT, and Icelandic settlers going to Spanish Fork, UT for example. Many Swiss emigrants moved to Midway, UT, and many of these communities still celebrate that common heritage. VID

These towns were built for many reasons. Some were to be trading posts, others were to produce certain goods. Cedar City for example was settled to gain access to the iron deposits there, and St. George was settled to cultivate cotton and flax for clothing. Sugar House was planned to be a place to cultivate sugar beets.

Others were settled as missions to different Indian groups, to convert them to Mormonism. Las Vegas was one of these, as were others. And some were a combination of things, like Sanpete was settled for wool and sheep production, but also as a mission to the local Indians. VID

They were all usually built with the same basic street model as SLC, and they focused on becoming self-sustaining farmers first.

Pattern for LDS settlements

Unlike settlers to Oregon or California, who liked to settle far and wide, the Mormons wanted to live in towns, so that they could meet for church, recreation, safety from Indians, and working together on public projects. They believed that by working together, they could be more efficient.

They would usually build towns nearby where mountain streams came into the valleys, to have easy access to water. And as the Wasatch Mtns run north and south, the pattern of settlement followed this as well.

They built churches, schools, and homes of wood, brick, stone or adobe (depending on what was most easily available). Most Mormon settlements had each of the following features: Fountain Green, Spring City

Streets followed a grid pattern.

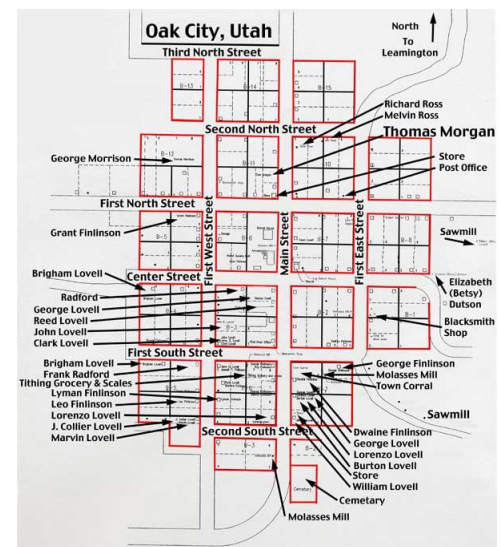

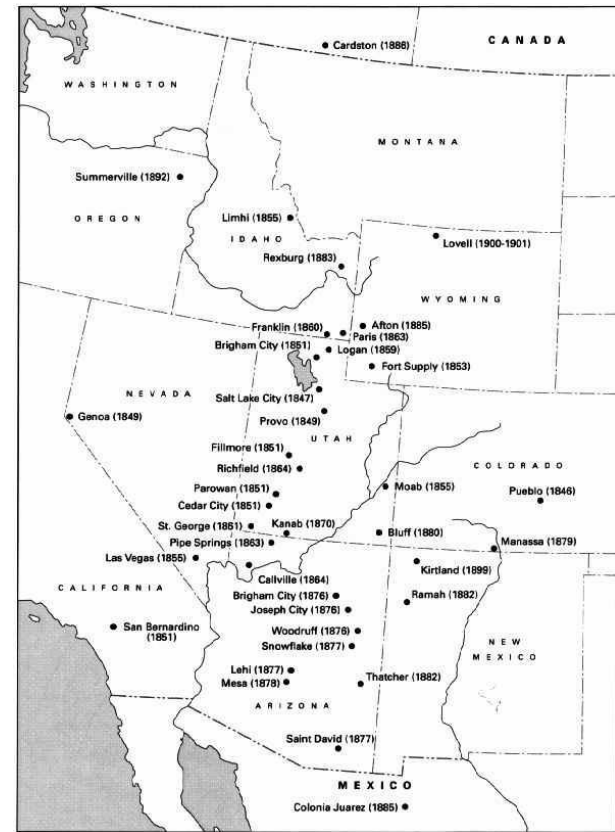

Streets were extra wide

Irrigation ditches ran along most roads for crops

City blocks were at least 4 acres large

Squares (usually in the center of town) would have public parks, buildings, etc., used for gatherings or celebrations.

Farmlands were planted around the city center, with poplar trees to shade the people and fields.
